Give me a sign: How do I know I'm doing God's will?

By Renée M. LaReau

Two years into her work at a New York advertising research firm, Joan Conroy realized her workdays were making her miserable.

"A lot of it was just the way I was feeling when I would come home at the end of the day," says Conroy, 27. "I wasn't feeling like I had energy; I was burned out. I didn't want to come home every day feeling like this."

Conroy, who has a bachelor's degree in psychology, longingly thought of her past social services work with homeless people, which she had done for two years after college.

"I felt like I have these great skills for counseling people; I have a heart for working with the homeless and the poor," Conroy says. "I thought, 'Why am I here with these top business executives?' Not that they don't need love, too, but when I have these great skills, what am I doing here?"

As unhappy as Conroy was, the thought of quitting her job without having another one lined up was daunting, especially while living in an expensive city. She decided to do some soul-searching.

"I talked to people a lot-my parents, my friends in the city," Conroy says. "And there was definitely some crying and some long walks." She prayed, wrote a list of pros and cons in her journal, and confided in a co-worker. Finally, when that co-worker said she thought Conroy would be more fulfilled if she left, Conroy decided to take it as a sign.

"It was a moment of clarity for me," Conroy says. "I decided to stop talking about it and make the jump."

Like Conroy, many people struggle to discern what they are "meant" to do, often described in religious terms as seeking "God's will." Whether it's a decision about career, family, relocation, or a medical issue, Catholics use a variety of spiritual discernment methods to determine their next step. Does God have a plan for each person's life? Many Catholics acknowledge they'll never know for sure, but that hasn't stopped them from devoting lots of time to discerning God's will for their lives. Since leaving her job, Conroy has enlisted the help of a trained spiritual director to help her figure out what to do next.

"It's a neat idea to have someone else help you look at your life and be able to pull things out for you, to help you see where God is moving in your life," Conroy says. "It's nice to have someone specific you can bounce things off of."

As she looks ahead, Conroy harbors some fear of the unknown, but she feels a sense of peace about her decision. (Source U.S. Catholic)

Gospel Reflection

Jesus honors those who do God's work by calling them brothers and sisters: Jesus tells us to be careful about we perceive God's work. He says there is a difference between the work of the Holy Spirit and that of Satan. He urges us to unify against the demon. As He said, "A divided house cannot stand."

Visit www.sacredheartpudong.com for more Gospel reflections.

We will Miss you, Please Stay in Touch!

On behalf of the Parish Council We wish all of our parishioners a healthy, safe and restful summer. We look forward to welcoming most of you all back in August! For our graduating seniors and departing families, we send you to your next destination with our prayers. How lucky your new communities and parishes will be!

Quote of the Day

“The Son of God became man and worked with human hands.... So we know, not only by reason alone but through revelation, that through their work people share in the Creator's work.” — Saint John Paul II
